CCMG INVITED LECTURE ON

Ragging and its Implication

Shila Khayambashi

Ph.D. student in Communication and Culture, York University, Toronto, Canada.

Abstract:

Ragging has been a serious problem among the Indian students for years, and some students even consider these problematic practices as inevitable rites of passage. However, the gravity of this phenomenon has been overlooked by students, parents, educators, and governmental authorities. This workshop examines the issue of ragging, while problematizes some of the controlling and preventing approaches concerning this issue. While this workshop discusses in depth about the definition, the characteristics, and the outcomes of this phenomenon, it invites the participants to share their viewpoints and experiences regarding this problem. This workshop will train the students to get familiarized with the signs of ragging and offers them the required skills to confront this problem effectively.
