WRITER'S KITCHEN

Riya Chawla is a PhD researcher in the Department of Humanities and Social Sciences at Malaviya National Institute of Technology, Jaipur. By way of consultation, she has assisted students (undergraduates, postgraduates, and Ph.D. students) realize their dream to study abroad.

In the Writer's Kitchen workshop, Riya will share her experience of drafting Statement of Purpose for higher studies and academic grants across disciplines. She will deal with the fundamentals of SOP writing, including the difference between a SOP and a research proposal, elements that 'work' in a SOP, and dos and don'ts. During the workshop, she will share original samples of SOPs (yes, those that were really accepted for PhD admissions abroad) and work with students on their draft of SOP. In addition, she will also talk about the content writing industry and the opportunities of working as a freelancer.

KITCH

Writing is a craft.

And like any other craft, it is teachable and learnable.

Through Writer's Kitchen, we envision a space where the know-how of academic writing, its technique and style, convention and innovation are broken down and decluttered by professionals.

We strive to demystify the academic writing process to make it more chewable, digestible and also palatable for the aspiring researcher.

Writer's Kitchen invites everyone from all spheres of academic training to contribute and be a part of this growing community.
